THE ARTICLE

From <https://breakingnewsenglish.com/2303/230306-uk-vegetable-rationing.html>

Shoppers in the United Kingdom (U.K.) are having to hunt around to find supplies of fruit and vegetables. Britain's major supermarkets are rationing produce like cucumbers, peppers and tomatoes amid shortages from suppliers. The big chains have cited various reasons for the shortfall in supply that has left shelves bare in green-grocery aisles. Britain's biggest supermarket chain, Tesco, has limited purchases of certain vegetables to three per customer. Tesco attributed its shortages to adverse weather overseas. In particular, it said a drought in Morocco had led to poor yields. Tesco assured customers it was working day and night to "get things back to normal".

Other factors are being blamed for the rationing. Britain's farmers' union said higher energy costs meant it was no longer financially viable for many growers to operate. It also said a tomato disease has wiped out a lot of crops across northern Europe. Industry analyst James Walton said Brexit has played a part in distribution problems. He said: "The EU accounts for much of the UK's import volume. If there are shortfalls in production in the EU, then it makes sense for EU producers to serve their local demand first. This leaves less available for export to the U.K." Many shoppers are perplexed at seeing photos on social media of supermarket shelves across Europe, and in war-torn Ukraine, laden with fresh produce.

Shoppings in the United Kingdom are having to hunt around to find supplies of fruit and vegetables. Britain's major supermarkets are rationing products like cucumbers, peppers and tomatoes amid shortages from suppliers. The big chains have cut down sales for the shortfill in supply that has left shelves bare in green-grocery aisles. Britain's biggest supermarket chain, Tesco, has limited purchases of certain vegetables to three per customer. Tesco's trolley-bands to shortages with the vegetables in particular, it said in a draft in March had led to poor yields. Tesco's issued customers that was working day and night to "get things back to normal".

The factors are being blamed for the rationing. Britain's farmers' union said higher energy costs meant it was no longer financially viable for many growers to operate. It also said tomatoes' harvest has wiped out the lot of crops across northern Europe. Industry analyst James Wiltan said Brexit has played a part in distribution problems. He said: "The accounts for much of the UK's import volume of the three shortfills in production in the UK, then to make sense for the producers to serve their local demand first. This leaves less available for export to the UK." Many shoppers are replaced to saving photos in social media of supermarket shelves across Europe, and in winter-kitchen, laden with fresh produce.
